Principal's Message

Whatever happened to the virtue of silence?

In 2012 the England Cricket test team captain, Alistair Cook, after winning the four match series in India 2-1 (their first since 1984-85 tour) spoke about the rigorous preparations the team had done to conquer "the final frontier." (Test playing nations around the world say the toughest challenge is to win a test series in India due to the unique playing conditions here and often the tailor-made pitches that favour the home team).

At the end of the series Mr. Cook disclosed that the team had a strange but unique method of preparation to play in Indian grounds: long hours of practice in the nets with the recorded loud noise of Indian cricket stadia playing in the background, in order to help players concentrate for long duration of time. Quite unlike the cricket watching crowd in Australia, England or South Africa, Indian cricket fans would not settle down for anything less than ear popping noise for anything happening around.

Our world is getting louder. Almost every time a compere goes up the stage, he would yell, "Hi guys, why are you quiet? Make some noise!" Only a boisterous and thundering response can give him the 'kick' needed to proceed! "Yup, that's the spirit," he says.

Almost every truck on Indian roads has the words "Sound Horn" written on the back. Here honking is mandatory, not sparing campus of educational institutions, hospitals or places of worship! Our celebrations are mostly about noise. Deepavali, the festival of lights, to many of us, is more about noise than light! People are obsessed with loud crackers, sounds, loud music for reasons unknown. The louder the merrier is our mantra!

In this culture of noise, if you have to make yourself heard, you should yell on top of your voice. For proof, watch the parliamentary proceedings of our country and the debates over Indian television news channels. Silence for us is an anathema! At best silence is something that many of us learn to tolerate!

Much of our conversations now take place over the omnipresent cell phone. How often people have to deal with obnoxiously loud individuals chattering away on their phones! You are already super loud and you put the entire conversation on speaker phone! In addition to your yappy voice, the people around you suffer more having to hear the muffled voice of the person on the other end of the line. Cell phone usage is an unmannered minefield because cell phone etiquette has not kept pace with the growth of phone users.

The love for noise is an all pervading phenomenon. Many parents watch their teenage children sitting among a pile of books, ear buds in, computer on, TV humming in the background and think, "I wish I could multi-task like that". There are others who stride across the room, pull the plug on the distractions, and ask the age-old question: "How on earth can you study with that on?" There are studies among the teenagers that say they cannot go for 15 minutes without engaging their devices. It is scary actually.

We live in a crazy and noisy world. Every time we get in the car, we turn on the radio. If we are home, we watch TV or go on the computer. We never really let silence enter our lives. I am not referring to monastic solitude when I speak about silence as a virtue. I am not suggesting if you spend time alone your life will drastically change. What I say is, time spent in solitude and self-reflection can restore, renew and re-energize you toward a life of meaning and purpose.

My conventional wisdom tells me, a person does the best when he/she focuses on doing one thing at a time. Dedicated study time without distractions produces better learning and better results. Adolescence is a time when young people discover their unique identities. They need moments of silence to reflect on their experiences—to discover who they are as individuals, what kind of relationships they desire, and what they value and believe about life. Tuning out the noisy world helps young people develop the ability to reflect and grow.
