Fr. Principal's Message

Ushering in a Society Based on Values

If we look at today's India, one thing which is much discussed everywhere is about corruption, and the talk about it increased with the new demonetization move of the central government. I am not here to discuss with you the merits and demerits of demonetization, but to reflect about why India is considered one of the most corrupt countries in the world, and what can we, as transformers of the society, do to address this issue of corruption. In Indian society, one factor that is all pervasive is corruption and it is a cause of serious concern for the people of India. It affects not only the political, social, and economic life of the people, but it also has its ramifications on their spiritual, moral, and educational life as well. Hence, the responsibility falls on each of the citizens to work towards making India free of corruption.

Some blame the culture as a reason for corruption in the society. I would not consider culture having an overarching effect on corruption, but I would say corruption feeds on multiple causes and indeed, culture is one of those. I would add to culture, the political system in the country, lack of stringent rules to tackle corruption, and the laxity in the implementation of those laws which are there to tackle corruption, as the root causes of corruption. It is part of the culture that a vast majority of the people in India do not find anything wrong in corrupt practices and the society tolerates without any problem those people who are corrupt. When people look for what is expedient and convenient, values in the society take a back seat. May be due to the long years of corruption in the society, who knows, corruption itself has become part of the culture of the society. Political system and lack of strong will to fight corruption are equally reasons why corruption continues in the society. When there is strong political will along with measures to tackle corruption and remove the root causes like ineffective management and organisation, economic instability, mediocre leadership, and lack of values and proper systems to end corruption, can our country progress to become a corruption free nation. If true change has to happen, then there has to be stringent rules to tackle corruption. All transactions including donations to political parties are to be accounted. When rules are clear and punishment is severe, people will think twice before indulging in corrupt practices. Those who are in-charges for the implementation of these rules need to do that without any compromise. The next breeding ground for corruption is the opportunity readily available for corrupt practices. With more of online transfers of funds to the end beneficiary and making the implementation of government schemes transparent, opportunities for corruption will come down.

Along with the government, educational institutions also need to play a rejuvenating role in the battle against corruption. St. Claret College conducted a one day national conference on Start Up India- Trends, opportunities and challenges on October 26, 2016, and one of the issues discussed was the difficulty entrepreneurs face in starting new businesses due to rampant corruption. The national conference also suggested the need to have value education in educational institutions, effective and regular vigilance from the part of society and non-governmental organizations, strong and effective leadership and administration, and the presence of impartial and proactive media, along with proper legislation, to end the menace of corruption.
