India's remote areas, rural areas and far flung hamlets remain connected to the rest of the country through their radio sets or transistors. They remain in touch with news and information. The people do not feel isolated. Where there is no TV, telephone or mobile services, the radio is the only hope.

The people listen to current affairs, discussions, educative talks, news, songs, dramas, lectures, weather forecast, addresses to the nation by the president or Prime Minister, devotional music etc., on their radio sets. It helps them keep abreast of the times by listening. The people in remote areas spend most of their spare time glued to the radio sets. Some even carry their transistors in fields, on bullock carts or while cycling.

Today the radio sets are very cheap and transistors are so handy that they have caught the fancy of everyone. This friendly gadget has proved to be a bonanza to millions, both manufactures and the users. Broadcasts over radio have benefitted students, teachers, panchayat people, farmers, fishermen and soldiers. Most of the developing countries including India are using radio broadcasts for long distance education and weather warnings. The radio has enabled the farmers to grow three or four crops a year by listening to Kisan broadcast. They have better crops and cattle since various problems related to them are discussed in broadcasts providing useful tips on remedial measures.

The rural folk learn through broadcasts about improved seeds, manures, fertilizers, pesticides and irrigation systems for water and energy conservation.

Largely accurate advance weather forecast have proved to be a boon to the people engaged in agriculture.

City people, who are prisoners of multiplexes, cable TV and internet cannot even imagine how the humble radio-set is revolutionising the countryside.
